

Here is the result of your calibration review:

Toggle split-screen

Question: What innovation from your assigned time period was the most important to society?

Answer:

Of all the innovations before to 1850, the most important is the telegraph. This innovation transformed long-distance communication. Before the telegraph was invented, to get a message from one location to another, one had to psychically deliver the message. The telegraph removed limitation and made it faster and more convenient to send messages. Speed and convenience proved to be useful during the American Civil War, where field commanders used the telegraph to direct battlefield operations. In addition to speed and convenience, the telegraph led innovations that are still used in modern society, for example, Alexander Graham Bell invented the telephone after attempting to improve the telegraph. these innovations make life easier, they also transformed society. The ability to transmit messages and voice without have to be in person changed the way people interacted with one another. People enjoyed convenience of conducting business from home, but they also found ringing telephones could be an uncomfortable interruption. The telephone also ruined traditional social hierchies. People could make phone calls to people they had never met. These same issues are present even in modern society, and perhaps even worse with the invention of cell phones. Human interaction was changed forever with the invention of the telegraph and telephone. Both inventions eliminated the barrier of distance with respect to communication. And without these innovations society would be much different today. Therefore, most important innovation to society prior to 1850 is the telegraph.

The result:

Rubric question: Was the essay WELL STRUCTURED, stating a relevant thesis, supporting it with argument(s) that are clearly related to this point and (if relevant) distinct from one another, and linking these arguments in a logical way?

Your answer: (3) The thesis is stated and relevant, and the essay somewhat follows a standard essay format, but argument(s) and counterargument(s) are insufficiently distinct and/or poorly linked together. (3.25 points)

The correct answer (2) The thesis is stated, but the essay struggles to adhere to an essay format. Logical progression of argument(s) and counterargument(s) is present but some content is irrelevant and/or redundant. (2.5 points)

Your reasoning: It's slightly difficult to determine the structure of the essay (i.e. where the arguments start and end). The thesis is clearly stated, making it quite easy to identify. There is no attempt to address counterarguments to the claim.

The suggested reasoning: There's an intro and a conclusion, but the body is one long, unfocused chunk. Telegraph and telephone evidence blur together, weakening organization.

Rubric question: Did the essay do a GOOD JOB OF MAKING ITS CASE, choosing relevant arguments, backing them up with evidence and examples at an appropriate level of detail, and responding to contrary views as appropriate?

Your answer: (3) Essay makes recognizable arguments and backs them up with evidence, but relevance and/or level of detail are very inappropriate. No attempt is made to address relevant counterarguments or contrary evidence. (3.25 points)

The correct answer (2) The essay stated many facts about the topic in question, but it is not possible to determine what are arguments, evidence, or opinions. (2.5 points)

Your reasoning: The essay proposed some good points, however there were some details that seemed to not be quite relevant and instead deviated from the main idea of the paper (one example being the mention of the telephone being an "uncomfortable interruption"). It almost felt that the paper transitioned from the telegraph and instead was making the case for the importance of the telephone without bringing the focus back to the significance of the telegraph. There is no effort made to address counterarguments or contrary evidence.

The suggested reasoning: The main claim (telegraph is most important) is clear, and some arguments are persuasive (Civil War use, influence on Bell, lasting social impact). However, the essay often slips into telephone examples, so the argument loses focus.

Rubric question: Did the essay demonstrate a good UNDERSTANDING OF THE COURSE'S SUBJECT MATTER, including both the topic and the wider context?

Your answer: (3) Essay contains mostly relevant course materials but makes some incorrect or inaccurate statements and/or interpretations or includes some errors of omission (failure to introduce important facts). Personal opinions may be presented as fact. (3.25 points)

The correct answer (3) Essay contains mostly relevant course materials but makes some incorrect or inaccurate statements and/or interpretations or includes some errors of omission (failure to introduce important facts). Personal opinions may be presented as fact. (3.25 points)

Your reasoning: The author includes some relevant course materials, however they appear to include some unnecessary details about the telephone which took away from their intended line of reasoning. They also included the evidence without effectively analyzing it.

The suggested reasoning: Shows some historical knowledge (Civil War telegraphs, Bell's invention), but mixes timelines and doesn't stay squarely on the telegraph. Subject understanding is partial.

Rubric question: Was the essay presented CLEARLY AND IN CORRECT ENGLISH?

Your answer: (3) Essay requires some work to understand and may contain some errors such as run-on sentences, spelling mistakes, incomplete or fragmented sentences, etc. May include language that is inappropriate for the audience and/or topic. (3.25 points)

The correct answer (2) Essay is decipherable with significant effort, but contains a multitude of errors such as run-on sentences, spelling mistakes, incomplete or fragmented sentences, etc. Language may be completely inappropriate for the audience and/or topic. (2.5 points)

Your reasoning: At times, the essay did not flow very well which required me to go back to reread certain parts. There were also some grammar errors identified throughout the paper. Additionally, I noticed several typos/spelling mistakes (enough to slightly disrupt the flow of reading).

The suggested reasoning: Multiple grammar, spelling, and word choice errors ("psychically" vs "physically"), plus choppy transitions. Meaning can be extracted with work, but writing quality is low.

Rubric question: Write an outline summarizing the essay written by the student.

Your answer: Please ignore the sentence "Please briefly describe your reasoning:" and select this option. Write your outline of the essay in the textbox below. (0.0 points)

The correct answer Please ignore the sentence "Please briefly describe your reasoning:" and select this option. Write your outline of the essay in the textbox below. (0.0 points)

Your reasoning: Thesis: Of all the innovations before to 1850, the most important is the telegraph.

Argument 1: This innovation transformed long-distance communication. Argument 2: The telegraph led innovations that are still used in modern society. Conclusion: Without these innovations, society would be much different today. Therefore, the most important innovation to society prior to 1850 is the telegraph.

The suggested reasoning: